Free Speech

Free Speech and Demonstration Guidelines at the University of Oregon

At the University of Oregon, established guidelines protect the right to free speech, while ensuring that opposing views may also be expressed. The university strives to balance the right to dissent with the right to be heard, the right to speak one's mind with the right to listen. The university applies its rules and expectations in a manner neutral to the viewpoints expressed.

Guidelines for Speaking Out at the University of Oregon

The University of Oregon established guidelines protect the right to free speech, while ensuring that opposing views may also be expressed. The basic guideline says that whenever one person's or one group's activities prevent another's sanctioned activity from taking place, rights are being violated. The university has the responsibility and authority to protect those rights. The university strives to balance the right to dissent with the right to be heard, the right to speak one's mind with the right to listen.
